I am happy to acknowledge the previous work of Barbara L. Feret. The bibliography of bibliographies in her book Gastronomical and Culinary Literature was the starting point for this list, although this one goes much further. Many thanks go to Jan Longone for the remarkable collection of bibliographies of culinary material in the collection of the University of Michigan and for her enthusiasm for bibliography, which fed my own. And merci bien to Mark Cherniavsky, who suggested that this work be pursued.

Preface

The world of culinary literature is said, in librarians' language to be "not contained," which means that no-one knows how many books there are. Furthermore, it is sometimes difficult to grasp the variety of subjects treated under a category such as "gastronomical and culinary literature". This document has been prepared to aid researchers who want to further explore various avenues of this vast field.

Some of the books listed here are completely bibliographic and, together, constitute the "canon" of bibliographic works in the study of things culinary and gastronomic. Others are specialized and fall at the end of books whose titles are listed here. They are of sufficient interest to be included here.
